Every Sunday morning, my brother Faizal would set off to the hawker centre with our father to buy breakfast. He was always eager⁽¹⁶⁾ to come along, because he loved choosing the dishes himself.

One Sunday, Father gave Faizal a fifty-dollar note and asked him to pay for the food. Faizal clutched⁽¹⁷⁾ the note tightly in his hand as they walked from stall to stall. When they reached the drinks stall, he fumbled⁽¹⁸⁾ with his change and almost dropped the coins onto the wet floor.

Father did not laugh at him. He simply steadied Faizal's hand and complimented⁽¹⁹⁾ him on remembering to count the change carefully. He told Faizal that handling money in public was a useful skill to learn early.

By the time they reached home, Faizal was holding the bags of food with an elated⁽²⁰⁾ smile on his face. He proudly told our mother that he had paid for everything himself, and Father gave him a wink across the kitchen table.

Comprehension passage for Booklet B (Questions 66 to 75)

Read this passage carefully. The questions in Booklet B (Section 9, Questions 66 to 75) refer to it.

The Lost Wallet

- 1 Arjun Singh sank into his seat as the train pulled out of City Hall station. It had been a long Tuesday at school, and his bag felt heavier than usual on his shoulder. He was twelve years old, in Primary 6 Resilience, and on most days he travelled home on the East-West Line by himself. He liked the gentle rocking of the carriage, the chime that played before each set of doors closed, and the quiet, faraway feeling of looking through the window as Singapore slid past in the late afternoon light. 5
- 2 Today, the carriage was almost empty. A tired-looking auntie at the far end was scrolling on her phone, and two teenagers in green uniforms stood near the doors with their earphones in. Arjun was about to take out his own book when something on the seat beside him caught his eye. It was a small brown wallet, slightly worn at the corners, lying half-tucked between the cushion and the side of the bench. 10
- 3 Arjun looked around. Nobody seemed to be reaching for it. Nobody was even looking in his direction. His heart began to beat a little faster. He picked the wallet up carefully, as if it were something fragile, and held it on his lap. It was made of soft brown leather, and it felt warm, as though someone had been sitting on it only a moment before. 15
- 4 For a long moment, Arjun did not open it. A strange, uncomfortable thought slipped into his mind. What if there was money inside? He had been saving up for a new pair of football boots for months, and his pocket money came only slowly. Nobody had seen him pick the wallet up. Nobody would ever know. 20
- 5 Then, almost at once, he heard his grandfather's voice in his head. "Arjun, beta, the test of a man is not what he does when people are watching. It is what he does when nobody is watching." His grandfather had said that to him so many times that the words felt like part of him. Arjun's cheeks grew warm with shame at his own thought. He took a deep breath and opened the wallet. 25
- 6 Inside, he found a thin stack of two-dollar and ten-dollar notes, a few coins in a small pocket, and, most importantly, an identity card. The photo showed a kind-looking elderly Indian gentleman with a neat white moustache and round glasses. The name printed beside it was Mr Rajesh Kumar. There was also a small phone number written in pencil on a folded slip of paper tucked behind the card. 30
- 7 Arjun got off at the next stop, which was Bugis, and walked straight to the

- station control booth. The MRT officer behind the glass was a young woman with a calm, friendly face. Arjun showed her the wallet and explained, in his clearest voice, where he had found it. She thanked him warmly and offered to keep the wallet at the lost-and-found counter until the owner came to claim it. 35
- 8 Arjun hesitated. Then he asked if he could try calling the number on the slip of paper first, in case Mr Kumar was still nearby. The officer smiled and said that was a thoughtful idea. She offered to dial the number from the station phone, and let Arjun speak. 40
- 9 The voice on the other end was shaky but full of relief. Mr Kumar had only just realised that his wallet was missing, and he was sitting on a bench at Lavender station, two stops away, trying not to panic. He thanked Arjun again and again. They agreed to meet at the Bugis station control booth in twenty minutes. 45
- 10 When Mr Kumar arrived, he was exactly the gentleman in the photograph, only a little more tired around the eyes. He took the wallet from Arjun with both hands, the way one might receive a precious gift. He checked nothing inside. He simply held Arjun by the shoulders and looked at him for a long moment, his eyes shining. Then, to Arjun's surprise, two tears rolled quietly down the old man's cheeks. 50
- 11 "My boy," Mr Kumar said softly, "there is more in this wallet than money. There is a photograph of my late wife. I would not have known where to begin to look for it." He took out a crisp fifty-dollar note from the wallet and tried to press it into Arjun's hand. "Please," he said, "you must let me thank you." 55
- 12 Arjun shook his head politely. "Uncle, I cannot take it," he said quietly. "I did not return it for a reward. My grandfather would not be proud of me if I did." Mr Kumar studied his face for a moment, then slowly put the note away. He bowed his head very gently, and said, "Then tell your grandfather, from me, that he has raised a fine young man." That evening, walking home from the station, Arjun's hands felt empty, but his heart felt unusually full. 60

- Q62. Arjun told Mr Kumar that he would return his wallet to him that evening.
- Q63. Because of the very stormy weather, the train was delayed.
- Q64. Despite feeling nervous, Arjun still walked up to the MRT officer to report the wallet.
- Q65. Arjun was not bold enough to accept the fifty-dollar reward from Mr Kumar.

Section 9 - Comprehension Open-Ended (Q66–Q75) — model answers

Q66. [1]

He liked the gentle rocking of the carriage, the chime before the doors closed, and the quiet, faraway feeling of looking out of the window.

Q67. [2]

“Nobody would ever know.” Arjun had been saving up for new football boots for months, and realised that keeping the money would be easy because no one had seen him pick up the wallet.

Q68. [2]

He means that a person's true character is shown by how he behaves when no one can see him. Being honest in front of others is easy; the real test is to do the right thing in private.

Q69. [3]

(a) the small brown wallet. (b) the saying about what a man does when nobody is watching. (c) the wallet (which Arjun had returned to Mr Kumar).

Q70. [1]

Order: 3, 1, 2.

Q71. [3]

(a) False - Arjun shook his head politely and said he did not return it for a reward. (b) True - the passage says Mr Kumar had only just realised his wallet was missing. (c) False - Mr Kumar said the photograph of his late wife mattered most.

Q72. [2]

He took the wallet with both hands as if receiving a precious gift, checked nothing inside, held Arjun by the shoulders, looked at him for a long moment with shining eyes, and two tears rolled down his cheeks.

Q73. [2]

(a) She offered to keep the wallet and then to dial Mr Kumar's number from the station phone - because she wanted to help Arjun reunite the wallet with its owner. (b) He tried to press a fifty-dollar note into Arjun's hand - because he was overwhelmed with gratitude.

Q74. [2]

Correct: (2) and (3).

Q75. [2]

Arjun learnt that doing the right thing, even when nobody is watching, brings a kind of happiness that money or rewards cannot give. Small acts of honesty have their own dignity.
